

Acknowledgments

This book owes a debt of gratitude to several people.

First and foremost, I wish to thank Andrew Wilson, my PhD supervisor, for drawing cultural systems theories to my attention and for his precious comments and suggestions during the various stages of my research. Without his constant support and brilliant tutoring, this work would not have been possible.

I would also like to thank Paul Baker and Marina Bondi, the members of the viva panel, for their detailed review of my thesis. Their insightful observations have informed the revision of my work, and helped me achieve a more organic discussion of the various topics addressed here.

I also feel indebted to Carlo Alberto Ratti, physicist and now also good friend, for his precious support in dealing with statistical calculations, and for showing sincere interest in my work.

My thanks also go out to Pierpaolo Mocavero, former student at the Faculty of Languages in Lecce (Italy), for having endured the exhausting task of manually coding the chocolate and wine data, as second coder.

Finally, I thank all my family and friends for bearing with me during my long months, not to say years, of incessant work. A special place in this group is reserved to Sara Gesuato, knowledgeable colleague as much as good friend, for her precious advice on how to face and survive academic pressure, and her constant support.

I would also like to express my gratitude in advance to those readers who will kindly inform me of the inaccuracies of this work.
